using `appendChild()` to

dynamically add radio and input type radio The idea is

I want to dynamically add a radio button like so: var radio = document.createElement("input");

radio.setAttribute("type",
"radio");
radio.setAttribute("value",
"1"); document.body.append Child(radio); But the radio does not appear. The HTML output is: How do I properly use appendChild() to create radio button? A:

You need to add the radio before appending your body. Right now your radio is being appended to the document, not the body.

var radio = document.createElement("input");
radio.setAttribute("type", "radio");
radio.setAttribute("value", "1"); document.body.appendChild(radio); document.b

ody.appendChild(document.createElement("input")); Alternatively, since the default value of an input is "on", you could set the value to "off". Edit: To dynamically create the radio, I'd suggest creating a tag for a normal radio, then using that to create the radio. var label = document.createElement("label"), input = document.createElement("input"), radio = document.createElement("input"), value = document.createTextNode("Off");

label.appendChild(input);
input.value = "on";
radio.setAttribute("type", "radio");
radio.setAttribute("value", "1"); document.body.appendChild(radio); Q: Where would we look for information on a Lost in Space character? Suppose that we had information on a character from Lost in Space who was a main character from an old picture. That is, he was in the picture as a teenager or young adult and he also had at least one appearance in the new show and we wanted to find out what happened to him (his story) in the show 1cb139a0ed
